"The Understanding the Science of Reading training was extremely informative and taught me how much I still need to learn about best practices in teaching kids to read in order to continue my growth as an administrator. I think it's fantastic that both my first grade team and I are side by side expanding our knowledge base for teaching kids to read and ultimately moving the academic needle forward."

UNDERSTANDING THE SCIENCE OF READING A 95 Percent Group Foundational Literacy Course

Bring this 1-day workshop to your district or school to build a common knowledge base among your PreK-6 instructional team. If you don't have time for a training that takes 5 days or more, this is the perfect starting point to ensure that all your educators have a shared understanding of this crucial topic.

Participants in this engaging workshop will:

- Understand what the term Science of Reading means
  - Explore how researchers study reading including where reading occurs in the brain, the difference between struggling and skilled readers, and how researchers study and validate instructional strategies
  - Know the 3 theoretical models of reading: the Simple View of Reading, the 4-Part Processing Model, and Scarborough's Rope
  - Explore how phonological awareness skills develop along a sequence and practice instructional strategies to teach PA
- Learn about recent research on orthographic mapping, why it is critical to efficient word learning, and practice teaching phonics concepts in ways that align with the characteristics of Structured Literacy
  - Learn how to develop fluency at the subskill level
  - Understand the role of situational models and background knowledge in comprehension
  - Develop your student's vocabulary with word learning strategies that include morphemes
